Workshop information

Your voice matters: working with the media and the RCP

This session aims to introduce RDC and SFDN members to the role of media and social media in shaping conversations about healthcare. Led by the RCP communications team, it will provide practical guidance on how to engage professionally and avoid common pitfalls. The session will focus on clear boundaries, helping you to understand when and how to contribute safely and when to seek advice.

RDC

Your role in maximising engagement and influencing change

This workshop will support RDC and SFDN members to build confidence and capability in influencing change and engaging stakeholders effectively. The session will focus on practical skills for understanding reactions to change, mapping influence, encouraging participation and working with others to create shared understanding and purposeful action.

RDC

Your role in leading change and maximising impact

This workshop aims to equip NCC and SAS members with the professional skills needed to maximise their impact within committee roles, considering how they might drive and promote change. We will consider models for change management and leadership theory, supporting you to develop practical skills and approaches to engaging effectively with colleagues and stakeholders, influencing with confidence, and communicating with clarity and credibility. Attendees will leave with enhanced confidence in sharing vision, building support for initiatives and supporting others to engage in change. These are all essential skills for effective and influential committee members.

Your membership: improving value

A central focus of the new RCP organisational strategy is to strengthen the support that the RCP offers to members at every stage of their career, ensuring that membership provides access to practical resources and content that support day-to-day clinical practice as well as ongoing professional development. Led by Dr Ben Chadwick, deputy registrar, this interactive session will explore how well the RCP's current offer meets your needs and where there are opportunities to strengthen it.
